

S1UgradUnsure

Winter break too long, summer too short.

don't like the block of study days

Families have time to spend together when it is on a national holiday that parents have off from work for. Feb break should not be moved.

The changes made by this scheme will have little impact on students throughout the semester, other than putting a long weekend over a non-holiday weekend. The loss of a study day during the exam period would be a huge downer to students, especially since weather is finally getting nice by that point.

Spring semester shouldn't start any later. Exams shouldn't end any later

The main thing is that Cornell's spring break does not match up with the spring break of any other school that I know of. Also, reducing study period days is not cool.

i don't like how we end even later, and i feel it is unnecessary to have two breaks.

I like having a study day in the middle of the exam period.

Changing the date of February break would just make it harder to coordinate with family that students are trying to visit. I see no great improvement from this calendar at all.

want an early spring break

Dislike the loss of study days, and also the movement of february break.

February break usually lines up with President's day

Not solving the issue at hand

Current is good already

It is good to have February break somewhat early - those first weeks back are difficult, and the break is appreciated. The Spring break should be moved to align with other schools. There is no need to shorten the study period.

Timing of February break doesn't really matter and is fine where it is. Also don't want exams to potentially be later so we get out of school later

I don't want summer to start later. This could affect summer internship schedules more.

I don't like how our Spring Break is so much later than other schools. I would rather February Break remain early than have Spring Break any later.

WAY TOO LONG OF A WINTER BREAK. We don't get out until late may? That sucks...

We should come back earlier in January. Having exams until the end of May is too long and infringes on internship opportunities.

no improvements are beneficial

This literally addresses no problems students have with the spring calendar.

I prefer the longer study period and I am ambivalent regarding when February break falls

I didn't really mind that Feb break is a little early--it gave a nice break if I'm overwhelmed with returning to school after such a long winter break. I'm not sure about having 7 exam days in a row (I once had 5 exams over 5 days, it was not fun) especially since it gets rid of a welcome study break.

Moving February break is not a bad idea, but ending the term even later is a bad idea keep it on president's day weekend. i want to see my friends at other universities--which is important for my mental health since ithaca is so isolated!!

I don't think feb. break is too early.

not that big of a change, but I'd rather get out earlier in May as we already get out later than a lot of schools. February break is still necessary even as early as it is now

We end late anyways

We already have an unusually placed spring break/end date compared to other schools and this does not help.

Winter break is already ridiculously long and doesn't need to be longer.

Please do not decrease exam time.

I personally don't think having a February break is very important (but this could obviously be different for others) and would prefer a spring break that aligns with other schools. Summer break still starts too late.

The February break is not the problem. We start and end extremely late. Our spring break is too late!

our spring break is too late

February break could stand to be a week later but the study period is as long as it needed to be, any shorter would increase the stress for students with multiple finals

The biggest problem with our spring schedule is that we get out too late. This is a huge problem for the entire computer science department, and the S1 schedule will only exacerbate this.

I feel that we already end at an absurdly late date and it would make coordination of internship start dates even more difficult for students if we push it back even just another day.

The most significant problem with the spring calendar is the abnormal spring break time. People want to be able to see friends during the semester and Cornell makes it impossible.

February break is definitely needed where it is. Also spring break is the same unusual spot.

This is even worse than the current spring calendar because school starts even later and ends even later. I do not want as long a winter break and I want summer break to start earlier.

Semester starts and ends too late and spring break is also really late

Moving february break has little effect, does not address concerns of too long winter break and too late end

First day of classes is too late in S1

Honestly Cornell already has an unusually placed spring break compared to other schools.

I don't see how this improves the schedule at all. Making exams later again interferes with summer internships and it doesn't solve our absurdly late spring break.

still seperated spring break

I don't like the later February break

Compared to everyone else we already have a late start to school and we have February Break too early because we start so late in January. Also it would nice to have spring break in March 3rd or 4th week.

study period not too long. shouldnt move back february break

We get out of school EVEN later which is an absolute no. I don't want to have February break even later. Spring break is awfully placed.

I disagree because I think we come back to school far too early. I think our winter break should end earlier, and our spring break should be earlier. Compared to my peers, we start back very late. As a varsity athlete that has to train over winter break, the campus feels very isolated. I hear from my classmates many times that they are extremely bored at home and are looking forward to the semester starting. If we started school back in the second week of January, we could keep February break where it is and move our spring break up further in the year. We would also finish the semester earlier and this would help make our summers longer.

Why are we still shortening study periods??

---

this doesnt do much besides move february break

---

I don't want to get out any later because for some internships, they require 13 weeks, so it will be harder to fit that in the summer. It could be more stressful since it might force me to start my internship as soon as my finals are over without a few days to breathe. Also, I don't enjoy having such a long winter break because I'm not productive like I am in the summer when I do an internship. In addition, by the fifth week of winter break, all my friends are back in school, so I have nothing to do and I might as well start class too.

changes to small to really matter

---

We start and end the semester later.

---

It still starts way too late and does not allow students ample time to rest before summer internship[s] start. Spring break still oddly placed as well.

---

The study period is not too long; it's too LATE. The only problem this solves is that it moves February break to a less awkward time.

---

Ends too late

---

I don't like the idea that finals week would be shorter. That would be more stressful because I;d have less time between my exams.

---

Later end? It's already ends extremely late to begin with.

---

The February break placement is only problematic if it is before 2 full weeks of school. The placement in 2017 was perfect and right when I was starting to get stressed. It makes more sense to have break over President's week when other schools/parental work schedule also have a day off.

---

The spring break being so far from other school's break is not beneficial.

---

Don't see how this is an improvement. Nothing changes except February break. I'm unsure of how I'm supposed to celebrate the white patriarchy leading America without having President's day off.

---

Doesn't fix any actual problems.

---

Spring break is STILL unusually placed compared to other schools.

---

February break's location is good where it is

---

I think the february break is well placed and comes at a time when students need a break from school. And cutting our final exam period for this small of a change does not makes sense.

---

Doesn't solve the problem of the short February and Thanksgiving breaks compared to the enormous winter recess.

---

Spring break should be around Easter.

---

The break placements do not make much sense, especially since February break would not fall on a holiday.

---

Current February break falling on Presidents Day allows students and faculty to be off at a similar time to most of our peers.

---

I prefer the longer study/exam period.

---

I'd rather start earlier and leave earlier

---

I really do not want to lose the study day between the final exam days.

Winter break is still too long, and we still end too late. I'd be fine with a shortened "study" period if professors were barred from assigning extra work or giving exams or expecting papers during the period. Moving the "February Break" a week later does not change its worth to me. The break is too short for me to go home (not from the NE), so this means I sit inside (during typically the coldest weekend of the year) and do the additional work I've been assigned over break.

We already get out nearly too late for some of the internships I've had in the past, no need to make us get out later and take away study days.

---

exam period is still too long, spring break should be earlier

---

We don't need Feb break. It's time to move up Spring Break.

---

Would rather have spring break compatible with other schools.

---

We start and end too late. I like that February break is a week later though.

---

Does not change spring break time.

---

Commencement is way too far after the ending of exams, and it would be less ideal to end classes on a Thursday because Slope Day would feel too close to exams.

---

earlier spring break is better

---

Might as well have an extra study day

---

I don't see the way pushing back February helps.

---

We don't need to start any later in January. And we already get out late in May.

---

I do not want to end that late in may

---

I disagree wholeheartedly with reducing the finals study/exam period

---

Goes too late into May

---

Spring break is too late, final exams last too long, end too late in the Semester.

---

The spring calendar starts too late already, and this only exacerbates this problem.

---

Earlier February break is better.

---

So the first week is only 2 days? Nobody will show up to class. I sure wouldn't.

---

Internships often start in mid-May, and the late exam period makes it very difficult to schedule summer internships.

---

February break is optimally scheduled for students to prepare for internships, especially those with the federal government.

---

Not enough of a change (Spring break is the only outlier)

---

PLEASE DON'T MOVE BACK THE SEMESTER START/END DATES ANY MORE. They're already much later than other schools and winter break is too long.

---

Again, I disagree that we have too many study/exam days; as far as I know, studying more isn't going to lower our test scores but studying less might. Additionally, lowering the number of exam days will lead to more conflicts. As for moving February break, it seems as though that will cause problems with the prelim schedule and could even result in people going home the weekend between two prelims which would remove the break in February break and at best replace it with studying (more likely though, people would still use it as a break and get lower prelim scores because they didn't study).

---

I don't like the changes to the final exam schedule. I prefer a longer exam period with more study days to break up exams.

---

Shortens summer break more - NO

We already finish the spring semester and this proposes pushing it further back. It does not resolve our unusually placed spring break. It shortens the study period for seemingly no reason (it doesn't even get us to end earlier). Most of the "advantages" to this seem like disadvantages to me.

see S2 explanation. Additionally, February break is early, but if we started the semester earlier, it wouldn't feel as early as it does now. Also, that is not as big of a concern as the summer starting too late or the winter break being too long.

---

Take out February Break, then move Spring Break to March like most schools for 10 days.

---

There are no real advantages to this proposal

---

The long study period for exams is good

---

This doesn't improve on the system at all.

---

The change to Feb break is not worth the cons.

---

It changes very little in the way of the exam period, which is what I am most interested in changing about the spring semester.

---

We ALREADY have an unusually placed spring break, changing it is not going to make it more unusual. I am against the idea of reducing study/exam period.

---

Longer study break is better. Also, our winter break is too long

---

Feb break is a big waste, and spring break is way too late

---

I like the current timing of February break

---

Makes winter break even longer and graduation even later. However I do agree Feb break should be pushed back

---

Plenty of time to prepare dorms, stop trying to shorten the exam period.

---

I do not like this schedule because it shortens the exam period and studies days; this means that students have a greater chance of their exams running together on the same day, and overall would be much harder to study for. I also don't think that moving February break is that meaningful (also since the weather in Ithaca is hard to predict, so it may not necessarily mean better weather).

---

A very minor change. I like the slightly earlier completion, but I actually like to have February break a bit earlier.

---

Moving February break back one week is nice, but we still get out significantly later than other schools. I know multiple people with job/internship offers that want them to start June 1. We don't graduate until May 28. You could barely travel to the job by June 1 when graduation is that late.

---

Spring break should be with other schools! People like to go on vacation from friends from other schools, which is currently impossible

---

Fails to address the issue where students graduate too late to be able to take internships

---

Moving February break later is good but the summer stays too short.

---

The new S1 framework does not offer any benefits.

---

I only put disagree because I think the schedules are similar enough that one isn't necessarily better than the other. I like that February break is later in the semester but I don't like that the classes go one day later before the study break starts.

---

I like when Feb. break is. It's a much needed break coming back from a long winter break. I feel like delaying it by one week would be too much time in between.

---

Losing one day of break for a more "well-timed break" doesn't seem to be worth it.

---

Spring break is too late and school starts too late in January

I like the original because there are more days to study for finals.

---

The earlier the spring exams end the better. It can be hard to get jobs given how late Cornell gets out.

---

We need the study period!

---

Spring break still makes no sense.

---

I like long exam periods and being able to leave early. shifting back finals week would make it impossible to go to other school's graduation

---

Having February break on Presidents' Day is important.

---

Why move february break off of presidents day weekend?? It seems fine as is. We also would still get back way too late.

---

No, the major problem with Cornell's overall schedule is that we are release too late (end school too late). Other colleges end in the beginning of May. This negatively impacts internships.

---

This makes no noticeable improvements and results in us ending 1 day later, which is terrible for students signing up for internships. Big internships (esp. tech internships) base their start dates off of the majority of college calendars, meaning Cornell students often have to arrange to take exams early, which may or may not be allowed, and then fly straight to their internships and start within a few days. This is hardly conducive to success in either endeavor.

---

Very much disagree. Seems like you got rid of slope Day and the interim study day in the middle of study week both which are terrible moves and I would personally actively protest if you did that. For your own good don't do that.

---

Ends too late

---

February break should be the same as other schools

---

Classes start too late and then we get out too late in May. It makes it difficult to start internships and jobs when we don't get out until the end of May. Plus, our winter break is too long. Especially for winter athletes who are here anyway. We would rather start classes earlier.

---

I like having a study day in between exam days, because it helps break up exams from being a continuous period. It also leaves more time between breaks, which is helpful because breaks are good for resting and working on classes.

---

Winter break is too long. We get out of school too late.

---

The start of the semester is too late

---

We end too late in May!

---

We still start way too late

---

Almost all summer internships start the week of May 20th, and have mandatory orientations. Pushing it back is just making the problems with spring break worse.

---

Winter Break is already so long. I think most students would benefit more from ending second semester sooner than starting later.

---

semester ends too late - reduce length of semester exam period too long - ELIMINATE STUDY DAYS, just have one exam week

---

Seems the same

---

There is no significant change. Putting February Break later is not good.

---

Why not just start school earlier? That's not that hard. If we're comparing ourselves to our peers, maybe we should consider how no one else starts the Spring semester as late as we do and everyone ends earlier. Let's be honest, the classes you take in Winter term aren't real classes. Also, lets just keep the study period.

---

Too little time between February and Spring breaks.

Doesn't fix the issues. Winter break should be shrunk in January. Spring break should be earlier.

I feel like spring is fine except for how early the February break is.

---

I don't see the point of the changes. February break is fine, and I like a long exam period. More time to study...

---

Awkwardly timed spring break remains, which is a very strong demotivator for most people coming home to visit friends over break.

---

Would rather have no feb break and just earlier spring break

---

STUDY PERIOD NEEDS TO BE EXTENDED NOT CUT SHORT. I don't know where the administration got the idea that it was long. Perhaps this applies students who mainly have papers due rather exams, but this does not apply to people like engineers or science majors where grades are heavily finals based.

Ending the semester any later than it already is would be unacceptable. It is already difficult enough to accommodate internships and summer plans with how late the current spring semester ends.

---

We have an abnormally long winter break (I only know one person who got back to school later than we did, a Brown student), and go far into May, with many of my friends at different schools ending exams by May 13th. The two breaks are important, but instead of pushing February break back a week, we should just start and end the semester a week earlier. February break would be relatively later this way. Also, it would make it plausible to push Spring break a week forward to a normal time. My family is going on vacation without me at the end of March because my dad's grad school and my sister's high school are on break but I am not. The shorter exam period though, good idea but not short enough. It's an improvement, though. I already planned a road trip to NYC because I have so many days between the end of classes and my first exam, as well as the space between my last exam and the one before it. Might actually drive to Niagra falls for a night too. Also this honestly isn't a joke I did plan a road trip I mean there's two weeks between the time classes end and the last exam it's ridiculous.

The February break we currently have coincides with the week of President's day which where I'm from in New England, everyone has that week off for February break. So I am able to spend time with my family more because nobody has to go to school. I do not like that the exam period goes one day longer because there are already issues with people having to be late to internships and this would make it worse.

---

We do not need to get out any later than we already do. The poorly placed spring break is also frustrating. However, if the spring break is staying where it is, pushing back February break makes sense.

---

Besides the shorter exam period, this framework does not offer much else that the current spring schedule does not.

---

I want to get out earlier in May. Start spring semester earlier and shorten study period.

---

We do not need a feb break and spring break is way too late

---

This calendar is the worst Spring Semester option. It does not resolve the issue of a the long winter break and students are released too late into May.

---

No. I like February break early before prelims start. Why is the study period being reduced?

---

The whole premise of february break is president's day; if anything spring break should be earlier.

---

I think winter break is too long as it is and should be shortened slightly. Also, I don't think the study/exam period is too long. In fact, I think it's too short.

---

Stop shortening the exam period.

---

Do not like the change to the study break; I am ok with everything else though.

---

Getting out that late makes it very complicated trying to coordinate internships

---

Doesn't change the current calendar enough to make an appreciable difference to me.

---

Ending so late in May is very inconvenient considering many students have internships that begin the first week of June, leaving them with 4 to 7 days of vacation after a stressful semester.

I see no benefits in doing this.

---

We start classes too late

---

Not good because summer break should start earlier for jobs

---

There's no advantage to the one on the right and I would appreciate a study day in the middle

---

i want to be home during presidents weekend where other home friends are home

---

Exams end even later than the current schedule. The goal should not be to minimize summer break. Starting school early in January is desirable because student's friends from other schools are not home and the break (even the current long break) is too short for most people to get part time jobs. Winter session should not take priority over creating a good schedule for fall and spring semesters.

---

Spring break is not well timed

---

The exam period is already later compared to other schools, which leaves little time for visiting home before summer opportunities. I would recommend starting earlier in January.

---

I don't think we should shorten the exam study period.

---

I like have the study day in the middle of exams.

---

We need to get out earlier in the summer not later. We can also start school earlier in the winter, everyone else has gone back to school before we do.

---

Makes very little imorovent relative to current oddly designed schedule.

---

I like the early February break.

---

Should start and end earlier

---

We finish late enough!

---

It's better if our break schedule (i.e. feb break) matches up with that of other schools so I can meet up with family during these breaks, as my siblings are at different colleges to me

---

It does not improve the current schedule because it is very hard for us with summer internships to start even later. The schedule is already hard enough for us with summer internships.

---

Not much is changing to lengthen the summer, so it is not a real improvement

---

Choices similar, but like to start earlier

---

The weekend does not count as "Study Days" - we have that time off anyways, so we effectively lose a day of study time as in the original calendar there are 2 non-weekend days for the study days. Also having Spring Break coordinated with other schools is really really nice.

---

The movement of February break to one week later won't change much, in my opinion, and generating two childcare days is not worth it.

---

The exam period should be longer because it allows students to study in a more relaxed manner rather than cramming everything in at once.

---

Moving february break isn't fixing anything (like the issue of getting out way too late in may/starting far too late in January)

---

Interferes with internship opportunities in may

---

Absolutely not. The spring semester needs to end earlier because it makes summer extremely short. The semester still ends way, WAY too late.

---

We start and end too late in the year.

I think instead of moving February break down a week (so it wouldn't coincide with other schools' breaks and causes problems for childcare), we should start a week earlier in January so there is more time between the start of classes and Feb Break. Our winter break is quite long, but instead of cutting it off in December, we should cut it off in January.

The January start date is still really late in January.

Again, no need for February break when we could add those two extra days to our spring break and actually call it a break.

Nothing really changes, main problems still exist

Like having feb. break when my friends do.

It does not get us out of Cornell any earlier (every other state in NY gets out 2 weeks ahead of us) and takes away a much needed study day in between final exams.

Classes need to start earlier in January and commencement needs to be earlier in May so students can report to internships.

We still start too late!

The new February break is too close to spring break. This would diminish the restful periods and could lead to a month of low productivity.

It would be better to start the Spring semester earlier.

Ends way too late - disadvantage for internship opportunities, having a late spring break is inconvenient, Feb break is placed appropriately, study period way too long

i would rather get out of school earlier

It does nothing to improve upon the issue of the really short summer.

I don't like how the study period is reduced.

many internships start late May we need spring break to align with other schols

It has marginal differences, not important enough to note

Don't move February break, but study period and exam period should be 11 days

Same comment about study day in the middle of exams. This schedule doesn't actually make graduation any earlier.

Reduces study period

This doesn't change much; one day won't make much of a difference.

If we want February break to be later in the semester, then we should start the semester earlier not move the break (it causes problems with childcare/spending time with family who might have the holiday off too). However, I do approve of reducing the exam/study period.

A shorter winter break is better, leave February break where it is.

Good distribution for exams

Spring break placement is still bad

We need more study days

if we shorted study periods and exam days then all our exams are crammed into short amounts of time so well have less time to study for them

Winter break is too long, so I wouldn't want to extend the spring semester start day even later. I do like that February break is moved a week later, though. Also, again, I like the length of our study /exam period.

Two days at beginning of semester is not enough time in first week. Rather have three class days at the beginning.

Students need a gap in their schedule during the study period. As a bioengineering premed, my finals are constantly scheduled so close together it is impossible to rest in between as it is. Without a day in between, anyone in the same position as me would be unable to perform well on any on the later exams due to lack of sleep

I think winter break is way, way too long. I would rather start two weeks earlier and finish the semester two weeks earlier as well.

February break would not fall over a holiday.

Barely anything has changed-

Begin school sooner and have spring break sooner as well. Shorter exam times

WE NEED TO START EARLIER, NOT LATER. END EARLIER AS WELL. STRONGLY DISAGREE.

The present length of the study and exam period is best. In this way, students have enough time to study for their many exams and prepare their rooms for move-out. Also, the present position of February break is vital for enhanced student performance.

I think February break could be pushed back, but exams should not start and end so late.

Classes start too late, spring break is too late

Already start later than most schools

It is important to have two breaks, but other than that I don't see the other S1 motivators as a reason to change the current plan

Stop reducing study period

Does not change much

The unusually placed spring break is difficult for families who have another child at another school

Thursday start to classes is weird

I dislike the odd spring break and the longer study/exam period is wonderful.

Desyncing our breaks from other schools is not desirable, with respect to breaks. Additionally, it sacrifices exam days for a marginally earlier end to the semester.

I would prefer to end as early as possible

Current February breaks aligns with Presidents Day, when my parents have off from work. Also I would prefer the spring break to be changed.

Extends the semester even further into summer

No significant change, only feb break would no longer coincide with national holiday

I prefer to have spring break coinciding with other schools. Disagree with point 2 from the framework.

Winter break is already ridiculously long, we don't need to push the start date back any further. Less final days means a higher chance for multiple exams on a given day. This only adds to an already stressful time. Graduation is so late. It doesn't help those trying to have internships, or starting full time jobs right after finals/graduation, as they barely get any rest time before they have to start working.

Study break needs to be long.

It's very similar.

No this is horrible. We get out way too late already

If one of the problems noted in the F1 and F2 was short summer breaks, then why would S1 end later in May? I agree with a reduced study/exam period. Having only 2 days in the first week might deter students from coming back - instead they might just skip week 1. Would like a better placed Spring Break that aligns with other schools, but not sure if that is possible given the desire to have February break.

Still end too late in May

Not worth moving one day from beginning to end. The only way to make the spring better is by ending earlier.

Later February break is fine but I don't want to have shorter exam period.

I think we end too close to June 1st.

School Starts too late either way

This is almost completely identical to the current spring schedule. this still releases students too late into May, which is the most important issue to fix.

I do not want fewer study days.

Moving Feb break to be a break not aligned with Presidents Day makes 0 sense at all - esp. for faculty with children. I'm pretty sure most upstate NY kids have "Mid-Winter break" and should be aligned with Feb break & Cornell's current calendar. S1 disregards how the world works on that matter.

I don't really see a difference. We still end very late and I like Feb. break where it is.

Spring break is too late spring break is way too late and final exams go way too far into May Get rid of our awkward Spring break I hate it.

This would mean that classes would be on Slope Day, which is not what students want. Move spring break to an earlier time please and also move the start date in January up.

I don't see the advantage, and adding an extra child care for little/no added benefit seems wrong.

summer starts later and even longer winter break

Cutting study periods is a terrible idea

Kind of a wash, but the extra child-care days and the terrible Thursday start (Wednesday is bad enough, honestly, especially for Tuesday only classes) throw it into the disagree category.

I want to get out as early as possible.

I think the February break is very well placed, and I strongly believe that we should not delay it by another week.

The biggest problem with the Spring calendar is that our spring break is too late, and classes go too far into may, this suggestion fixes neither of those

I already have the opinion that our spring semester starts much too late

February break is appropriate where it is.

Longer study break is nice

I do not agree with shortening exam periods

there are no problems with our current spring calendar.

---

I like the placement of February break, and there is no need to start later. Winter break is long enough!

---

I would prefer to have February break where it is now and to have the longer study period.

---

This one day change makes no difference. Again, childcare is simply not a student issue.

---

I don't think it's enough of an improvement to justify the change.

---

The February break is too late

---

I like that February break is later in the semester, but we only get out one day earlier than usual, which will not make a huge difference for those trying to start jobs/internships. And the shorter exam schedule will just make it harder to move exams if you do try to leave early.

---

I like the February break where it is because it does not conflict with prelim time.

---

Finals should end earlier. The semester should start earlier like most other schools.

---

We go back to school too late and get out for summer too late

---

It's nice to have February break happen on President's Day Weekend because a lot of K-12 schools have President's Day off too; Cornell students with younger siblings can visit home and spend more time with their families.

---

Having Spring break with other schools is valuable to spend time with siblings in other schools and friends.

---

Study days are of top priority and more is better.

---

Our exams are already very late compared to other schools. We shouldn't make them any later.

---

Very late end of the semester

---

Do not think that February break adds significant value regardless of time, dislike that Spring break does not align with other institutions.

---

Again, I want a longer summer for internships. Plus, our winter break is insanely long. I get bored by the end and most other schools have started well before Cornell.

---

Spring semester should start earlier!

---

This literally does nothing, I think we need to start spring semester earlier.

---

Spring break is too late, and I don't want a reduced study period.

---

Younger siblings often have off over the current February break, allowing for family time

---

I don't think those are significant changes compared with the current Spring calendar. The exam periods still run too late into May.

---

Although the moving of February break splits the number of weeks more evenly, I don't think it makes a lot of sense, logistically. For students who are visiting family, I think we would rather go during President's Day weekend since our siblings and parents also have a long weekend then. It would be better if spring break were moved up earlier by a week rather than this proposal.

---

It doesn't make sense to have class on Slope Day - no one will attend. Again, a two-day first week of class (Thurs, Fri) will be ineffective.

---

Long weekend should be over Presidents' Day weekend.

---

Ends too late, winter break is too long

---

Out of sync w other schools

Spring break is still inconveniently placed.

---

Less time for Summer

---

No intermittent study days Only two days in first week of instruction (not all classes will meet)

---

We need to start earlier so we don't get out in late May.

---

Study period is shorter

---

Spring break is still at a weird time compared to other schools.

---

Prefer an earlier Feb break, as currently exists.

---

For students with heavy class loads, the longer study/exam period is necessary to have enough time to study adequately for all classes.

---

February break is fine being early. The real issue is that Spring Break is poorly placed. Also biggest issue is we get out too late in May to get good jobs/internships which this doesn't solve

---

We already have a super long winter break. We're already used to spring break being weird. No need to delay it more

---

too long of a winter break

---

The spring break still falls at an awkward time; that was the main motivation for wanting to move the spring semester in the first place.

---

Semester starts too late

---

There really is no real difference between the two.

---

prefer not to keep our spring break

---

It would be better to try to end closer to other colleges and have a more similar Spring break, not later.

---

We need to end earlier

---

I do not like fewer study days

---

We already end obscenely late compared to most schools, which can restrict summer opportunities

---

Study period need to be long

---

I enjoy the longer study break

---

Why do all these options involve shortening study days before finals? I have really needed those over the years

---

The Study/Exam period is not too long.

---

The placement of Spring Break is terrible. At least associate it with Easter or some holiday where students would be able to see their friends from other schools during their time at home.

---

It is already difficult to start internships with how late the semester ends, should not make it any later.

---

Inconvient

---

Longer winter break means longer 2-a-days for us wrestlers

---

The Spring Break is so unusually placed, that it is just too much to not like it.

---

Winter break too long Semester ends far too late

Again, I do not like the shorter exam period and the unusually placed spring break is weird study period is too long, spring break is at a weird time, too late into may.

---

---

Spring break isn't that early.
