

Cynthia Grant Bowman is the Dorothea S. Clarke Professor of Law at Cornell Law School, where she teaches courses relating to law and women, including family law, feminist jurisprudence, and a family law clinic which she created in January of 2012 and has taught ever since. She has been one of the faculty senators from the law school for two years. Prior to joining Cornell in 2007, Professor Bowman was very active in faculty governance at Northwestern University, where she taught for 18 years. She served as president of the faculty senate (called the Northwestern University General Faculty Committee) for two years, as chair of the Organization of Women Faculty for two years, and as chair of the Faculty Advisory Committee at the law school for two years. Her interest in faculty governance has been reawakened by the important issues confronting the university in the wake of the 2016 election. That fall she presented a resolution to the faculty senate seeking to make Cornell a sanctuary campus.
