The destination is important, but what we see and learn along the way is equally if not more important.

It is supposed to be hard and uncomfortable.

Glad that we did not take the easy interstate route.

The screenshot shows a ballot page from Cornell University. At the top left is the Cornell University logo and name. The main heading asks, "Do you support the resolution given below that is concerned with the creation of a Center for Racial Justice and Equitable Futures?". Below this are three radio button options: "Yes", "No", and "Abstain". A horizontal line separates this from a comment section. The comment section is titled "If you would like to pass along a comment please use this box:" and contains a large, empty text input area. Another horizontal line follows. Below that, a disclaimer states, "Your vote is confidential and your comment is anonymous unless you identify yourself." The "The Resolution:" section begins with "Whereas President Pollack charged the Faculty Senate to develop plans for an antiracism center in her July 2020 letter to the Cornell community;". The next line reads, "Whereas the Faculty Senate discussed the working group charges and methodology at its 9/30/2020 meeting;" followed by "Be it resolved that the Faculty Senate believes that the recommendations set forth in the WG-C Final Report are worthy of careful consideration by the President and Provost;". The next line says, "Be it further resolved that broad, transparent consultation with the faculty must attend any decision to implement a WG-C recommendation;". The final line reads, "Be it finally resolved that such consultation include engagement with the Faculty Senate and whatever standing committee might be relevant, e.g., the Academic Freedom and Professional Status of the Faculty Committee."
